Oh, I don't know where to start, I mean, the last time I told this tale, I left it as if everything was ok, but if I continue now, what I said before would be a lie. But I should tell, so everyone would know what truly happened. Its been 1 years after the event that happen in Tokyo. But more importantly to Laura Haruna, an 11-year-old girl who suffered something I'm sure everyone would tell themselves, it's a dream. Well, I got something to tell ya, its not a dream. Also, Hamtaro, a little furry hamster have also been affected by the event, he always looks behind and sometimes always wonders, "What's in the dark?" Hamtaro and Laura have moved to Okinawa a year ago, moving in a house with her Grandpa and Grandma, or Jack and June. The moving process was hard, but you should know its for the best. As one year passes by, the scar left in the inside of Hamtaro and Laura began to heal, and is still healing, but I'm afraid this tale is how the process of healing will be interrupted.

_ -Laura's Home, Kitchen, Afternoon- _

Laura has finished school, a part of a day where most people are torture in the way of knowledge. Laura, figuring that she is smart, is automatically doing her homework. I know, when she was younger, she usually do her homework last and sometimes get poor grades, but Laura now are getting straight As and always finishes her homework on time. The reason for this is one reasonâ€¦ fun. Whenever Laura doesn't do her homework first, it reminds of her of her old home in Tokyo. Now if something terrible, such as your parents died had happened in one place, would you do the same routine you did once before so it can just remind of that place, no. Laura can't take the pain, so she's using the phrase "It's Easier to Run, replacing this pain with something numb."

Laura- Wellâ€¦ finally! I'm done.

The door opens, it either means two things, her grandparents are home, or its just a part of your imagination.

Jack- Laura, are you here?

Laura- Yeah, Grandpa! I'm in the kitchen.

Jack walks slowly to the kitchen, but knowing his age and the effect of what happened to his son, he walks a little bit slower.

Jack- So, how ya doing?

Laura- Fine. You?

Jack- Ok, Laura, I wanted to talk to you about something.

Laura- Sure, what?

Jack- I know you're doing well in school, in fact you're doing very great, but what worries me is that you no longer have fun anymore, its not healthy.

Laura- What do you mean?

Jack- Well, you don't have friends, you're so quiet, you barely watch TV, and you never really talk to us anymore. Why?

Laura- Grandpa, lookâ€¦ I want to have fun again, I truly do. Its just that, after what happened back at Tokyo, fun now makes me think back at all the good times that use to exist. But that's the thing, it "use" to exist. Every time I think or do anything fun, I make me think backâ€¦ and I don't really want to look back now.

Jack- Look, Laura. We all know what happened with your parents and-

Laura- There's more to it then that.

Jack- What?

That's right; Laura never told anyone what happened to her. I mean, think about it, if you heard something a bit farfetched from reality, do you think one part of you would believe itâ€¦ Hell no. Laura understood that when she realizes the effect of the Grudge. But now, Laura feels like confessing will help her, I mean they say "Confessing is good for the soul."
